Questions 16 to 25

Happiest Countries

Fans of Denmark must be even happier than usual: Denmark has retaken the title of "world's happiest country," knocking Switzerland into second place.

Denmark and Switzerland were closely followed by Iceland, Norway and Finland, according to the World Happiness Report Update 2016, released Wednesday in Rome by the Sustainable Development Solutions Network for the United Nations.

Denmark won the title three of the four times the report has been issued, losing to Switzerland only once.

People in Burundi are the least satisfied with their lives, according to the survey of 156 countries, but residents of Benin (153rd place), Afghanistan (154), Togo (155) and Syria (156) aren't doing much better.

The United States ranked 13th in overall happiness, lagging behind Canada (6), the Netherlands (7), New Zealand (8), Australia (9), Sweden (10), Israel (11) and Austria (12). Germany came in 16th place, while other superpowers -- the United Kingdom (23), Japan (53), Russia (56) and China (83) -- were markedly lower.

Some countries that saw drops suffered economic and political turmoil -- including Greece, Italy and Spain -- while Ukraine's political trouble and violence likely caused a significant drop in happiness there.

Fun Facts:

- The more happy people you associate with, the happier you become.
- Being connected to happy people improves a person's happiness.

Strictly focusing on financial well-being can obscure the larger picture.

John Helliwell, Co-director of the Canadian Institute for Advanced

Rather than taking a narrow approach focused solely on economic growth, we should promote societies that are prosperous, just, and environmentally sustainable.

Jeffrey Sachs, Director of the Earth Institute at Columbia

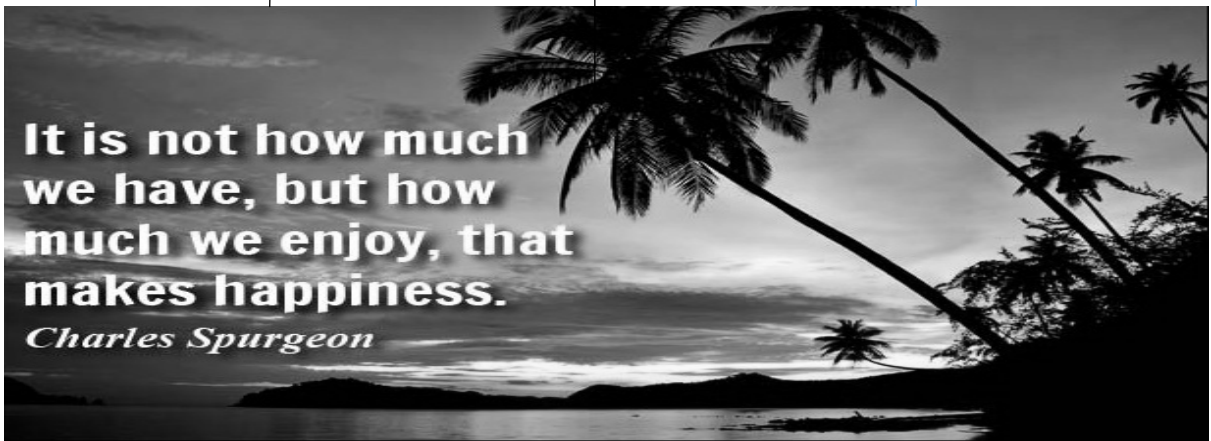

Iceland and Ireland both suffered through banking crises that dramatically affected their economies but didn't greatly affect their happiness, according to the report. What both countries have is a high degree of social support, enough to put Iceland in third place and Ireland in 19th place this year, according to the report.

Questions 26 to 31 are based on the following passage.

- 1 Click, click, click. The sound of the alarm clock woke me up to a new dawn. Raising my hands, I grunted as I hit the device, hoping it shuts up forever. Then like a jolt it came to me, "It is really today. I will officially become an undergraduate today". All the months of late-night reading for SAT - and my mum's fiery-red prayers against demons, in my family and out of it, who will think of trying to withhold her son's admission - had finally paid off. The University of Nigeria, Nsukka awaits. My mum's shout prompting me to wake up for prayers confirmed it. My heart swelled up again at finally making it to the University. My people don't call it M̀h̀h̀d̀m̀ - know it all - for nothing. "Frankboy, you are good," I kept saying to myself. 5 10
- 2 It is quite a feat to get into a University in Nigeria at 15, and my mum did not forget to mention it at the family prayer that was held for her 'illustrious son'. I didn't mind as oblations upon oblations were poured on my head. I was just too overjoyed. I smiled through it all as mummy called on all the archangels in the universe to guard and guide me - as if I was the only one in the world - and for all the demonic armies to bow before me. 15
- 3 After the prayers, I got different advices from different people. While some told me to shy away from drinks, others told me to neither look at ladies nor talk to them, while yet another group told me to always fear God, and not to join any cult group. My dad summed it up with, "Frank, you are now a University student and that makes you an adult. Although you are just 15, you are now a man. Hold unto God, read your books, and desist from evil. In our family, we are neither thieves nor liars. Ìm̀rà̀r̀ à̀s̀ù̀, s̀ù̀d̀ n'ìkwé, ìm̀gh̀í̀ à̀s̀ù̀, s̀ù̀d̀ n'`l̀à̀ (if you know how to pound, pound on the mortar, if you do not, use the floor, which means that I can choose to heed good advice or not)." I half listened through it all, as I was now impatient to go, but I was too happy to be rude to anyone. 20 25
- 4 My dad drove me out to the bus stop, where I would get a bus to Nsukka, the University town. Although my mum wanted him to drive me to the school - fearing that I was too little to make the journey - dad stuck to his guns, insisting I make the journey alone. "He has to be his own man, and cuddling him would not help that", he said. That was how I travelled to a far place alone for the first time. 30
- 5 At the bus stop, seeing myself alone with no familiar face around, most of my bravado and exuberance fled. It became very clear now to me that I was going off again to be all by myself. At least in secondary school I was little enough to have my parents visit me without being embarrassed. Now I am a "big boy," and big boys don't get frequent visits from their parents. Thoughts of the stories I have heard about the University loomed large on my mind: how the school was so big and the students were so many that it would take weeks or months to notice someone's disappearance; and how cultists force students to join or get killed. All that ran 35 through my mind as I sat in the bus, waiting for other passengers to come and fill up the seats for our departure. I was so engrossed that I didn't hear the voice or notice her until she stretched out her hand to tap me on the shoulders, "Excuse me, I asked if someone is seated beside you," I heard her say. "No, no, no, not really", I confusedly stammered in response. "Alright then, adjust a little for me to sit," she told me. Before I could collect my thoughts, she had already sat down beside me, smiling at me as she did so.

6 "My name is Jennifer, what's yours?" she asked. When I told her my name, she told me it's a nice name. For the next three hours, Jennifer and I spoke about a lot of things, although I must confess, she mainly spoke, while I listened. By the time we were halfway to our destination, I knew that Jennifer is an only child; that she likes movies a lot; that she is a second-year student of the same University; that she thought I am a listener, and she liked it - and me - a lot, and that she knew I would enjoy the school very much.

7 Two hours later, seeing the gates of the school, I looked down at the sleeping form of Jennifer leaning contentedly at the dirty window of the bus, and I knew then that no matter what, the University holds a lot of surprises for me. "Jennifer, Jennifer, wake up, we are here," I smiled as I roused her from sleep.

SECTION D[20 marks]*Question 32The following questions are based on the poem below.The Living Photograph

My small grandmother is tall there, straight-back, white broderie anglaise shirt,
 pleated skirt, flat shoes, grey bun,
 a kind, old smile round her eyes.
 Her big hand holds mine,
 white hand in black hand.
 Her sharp blue eyes look her own death in the eye.

It was true after all that look.
 My tall grandmother became small.
 Her back round and hunched.

Her soup forgot to boil.
 She went to the awful place grandmothers go.
 Somewhere unknown, unthinkable.

But there she is still,
 in the photo with me at three,
 the crinkled smile is still living, breathing.

- a) Give two descriptions of the persona's grandmother's appearance.

(i) _____

(ii) _____

[2 marks]

- b) Why did the grandmother forget to boil her soup?

- c) Do you consider the grandmother as courageous? Give your evidence from the poem.
