Jane	: (Silent)... Wow!

- 2 From the dialogue above, we can conclude that
- A the test was difficult.
 - B last minute study helped.
 - C Jane did not work hard enough.
 - D Maria is unsure of her own answer.

Managing stress in its early stages can help maximize the college/university experience and opportunities for students. There are three kinds of common stress that triggers students' experience:

Social

Social stress puts serious peer pressure on students. Dealing with new relationships, balancing academic life with social life, living with or without family members, adjusting to the new environment, all trigger stress in students.

Academic

Strict schedules, deadlines, low grades, challenging classes, exams, responsibilities, and poor time management all lead to a build-up of academic stress.

Daily life

This stress is associated with issues that are not related to academic or social life. These can include daily commute, part-time jobs and financial burdens.

3 Based on the article, which is the most common cause of stress in students?

- A Financial problem
- B Strict everyday schedule
- C Issues related to self-management
- D Problems regarding personal relationships

A Cambridge-based English Literature syllabus will be introduced to secondary schools next year in a move to boost proficiency in the language.

Form Four students will study the syllabus in January and sit for the SPM exam with a new format in 2021, Examinations Syndicate director of examinations Adzman Talib said.

The 18-month curriculum of this elective subject is drawn from 10 poems, one novel or six short stories, and one drama, he said.

Adapted from: The Star, 23 June 2019

4 According to the article, all SPM 2021 candidates will be

- A given the option to learn English Literature.
- B tested on English Literature in 18 months.
- C taking English to improve their language.
- D answering English with the latest format.

Sardines are rich in both vitamin D and omega-3 fatty acids. Both of these nutrients are known to overcome one's minor depressive disorder. Low vitamin D levels have been linked to depression around the globe. Some studies have linked its deficiency to other mental health problems such as personality disorder and post-traumatic stress disorder. Therefore, eating food rich in vitamin D can make people happier.

7 What is the main idea of the above extract?

- A Depression is a global problem.
- B Sardines have high nutritional values.
- C Eating sardines can overcome depression.
- D Lack of vitamin D can cause personality disorder.

Mid Valley City Charity Run 2019

The Mid Valley City Charity Run is a Corporate Social Responsibility initiative by Mid Valley City with the aim to support various NGOs and their efforts to build awareness of issues that affect Malaysians as a whole. The run is open to the public. However, parents' approval is a must for the participants under 18 years of age.

This year, participants will be running to end education inequity in Malaysia. Participants' registration fees will be channelled to Teach For Malaysia for the work they do in the lives of thousands of students in high-need schools across Malaysia.

8 In the text above, we can conclude that the Mid Valley City Charity Run

- A helps improve education in Malaysia.
- B requires no parents' permission.
- C gives support to all NGOs.
- D is open to adults.

Questions 9 – 15 are based on the following passage.

Crab catching can be fun but it is only for those who do not mind the mud and the smell. The crab catcher must be immune to the stench of the swamp. And of course he must have stamina and a sense of adventure ____9____ struggling through the mud is just like a fly struggling in a pudding.

The tools of a crab catcher are simple. All he needs are some traps and baits. He needs a parang too to ____10____ his way through thick mangrove swamps. The trap itself is a simple affair, crude and primitive in nature. A bamboo of about ten centimetres thick is cut into two pieces, each measuring about 80 centimetres. They are bent slightly by heating them ____11____ a fire. A cross arch is formed by tying the mid section of the bamboo with a sturdy string. A bait is ____12____ from the cross-joint by a string. Then it is submerged into the water. All the crab catcher has to do now is to wait.

It all sounds so simple. ____13____ waiting in the mud is all but simple because it is actually an invitation for the mosquitoes to attack. Therefore, a crab catcher must keep moving just to keep the mosquitoes at bay. He must also keep brushing the ____14____ area of his body because the mosquitoes sting by the thousands. A few hours later, he checks the traps. He quickly ____15____ his catch by tying the mean-looking pincers with a length of string before putting it away.

Questions 26 – 31 are based on the following passage.

- 1 I often think about my childhood friend, Ismail. Back in the early 60s, our families lived a stone's throw from each other on the outskirts of Kuala Lumpur, surrounded by a vast expanse of rubber and oil palm trees. Ismail's father was the plantation lorry driver and Ismail was the eldest of five children. No one was bothered that Ismail was a Malay Muslim and we were Indian Hindus. We just accepted our differences. 5
- 2 We must have been nine when we became friends. Ismail, my elder brother Jothi and I would watch with fascination as his father busied himself in his workshop. Ismail's father, a genial bear of a man, was a handyman of sorts. Once he converted a huge cylindrical glass container into an aquarium. We were thrilled whenever we had the chance to help him with his tools. 10
- 3 In time, the three of us built a den from discarded zinc sheets and old wooden planks not far from our homes. Here, we spent many a sultry afternoon, away from my younger sister Prema, a curious seven-year-old who constantly wondered what her secretive brothers were up to. We would enjoy the sugarcane and guavas that Ismail brought from his garden. We would provide the tapioca, kitchen utensils and salt, all surreptitiously taken from our home. Mom was suspicious at times but she never made a fuss over her 'missing' utensils. After washing the tapioca using water from a nearby stream, we then sliced it into thin half-moon discs, sprinkled on a little salt and deep fried them in the wok over an open fire. That was how we made our own tapioca chips. I have never tasted better ones. 15 20
- 4 During the school holidays, we would explore the countryside on our bicycles, hoping to come across the unexpected. Going zipping past the cliffs with a sheer ravine falling away on the other side of the path was exhilarating! Stopping to catch our breath, we would watch the flash of colour as a kingfisher flew by. These experiences filled us with a sense of adventure and awe. 25
- 5 Perhaps because he was the oldest child, Ismail acted responsibly and was seldom emotional. He had a steady hand and was quick to help. Once, he deftly removed a thorn that had pierced my foot while we were swimming in a stream.
- 6 Occasionally, during the weekends, Jothi and I would go to Ismail's house. His younger sisters minded baby Udin, as their mother, a petite woman in a sarong, smiled and busied herself in the small kitchen. I remember once she stewed some chicken while the children peered into the pot and murmured "delicious". Just like my family, they rarely had meat. At times Ismail would accompany our family as we made a rare shopping trip to town. We would be glad of his company. The shy smile on his face spoke a thousand words. 30 35
- 7 The years passed and memories of my childhood days grew hazy. One dismal afternoon in mid 1983, I stopped a taxi in Kuala Lumpur and got in just as the skies opened up. I stated my destination and prayed that I would not be late for my job interview. There was a recession and jobs were scarce. The driver, a small, neatly dressed man, looked intently at me through his mirror. "Raddar?" he said, using my childhood nickname. I was astonished at being so familiarly addressed. There was no mistaking that shy smile – it was Ismail! 40

8 As I grasped his shoulder over the front seat, I felt a genuine affection, something hard to describe. He patted my hand and said "I haven't seen you in a while, friend." 45 We chatted as he drove. Ismail's parents were well. His sisters were married and so was he. His work as a taxi driver was temporary. He would soon be heading to Pahang to work. Someone once said: "Friendship – pure, unselfish friendship – nurtures, strengthens and lengthens a relationship."

32 Read the following stanzas of The Living Photograph and answer the questions that follow.

The Living Photograph

*My small grandmother is tall there,
straight-back, white broderie anglaise shirt,
pleated skirt, flat shoes, grey bun,
a kind, old smile round her eyes.
Her big hand holds mine,
white hand in black hand.
Her sharp blue eyes look her own death in the eye.*

*It was true after all; that look.
My tall grandmother became small.
Her back round and hunched.
Her soup forgot to boil.
She went to the awful place grandmothers go.
Somewhere unknown, unthinkable.*

*But there she is still,
in the photo with me at three,
the crinkled smile is still living, breathing.*
